

HABBINSON

PERSONALITY & ENTREPRENEURSHIP SCHOOL

— PARENT INTELLIGENCE REPORT

3 rules to keep it fun

Want to raise an entrepreneurial kid? Give your child $5 and a challenge. Learn how a tiny money mission builds initiative, problem-solving, and real-world confidence.

5

ACTION STEPS

6

EXPERT FAQs

3

RESEARCH SOURCES

THE CHALLENGE PARENTS FACE

Here's a tiny experiment that teaches more than a year of lectures about money. Hand your child a five-dollar note and one challenge: "Turn this into more." Then step back and watch a young problem-solver wake up.

— THE 30-SECOND ANSWER

3 rules to keep it fun

QUICK ANSWER

How do you raise an entrepreneurial child? Give them small, real challenges with real stakes — like turning $5 into more. Let them plan, try, fail, and adjust without you taking over. These low-risk missions teach initiative, money sense, problem-solving, and the confidence that comes from making something happen themselves.

— WHAT THE RESEARCH SHOWS

“Harvard's research on executive function shows that setting a goal, making a plan, and adjusting when it flops are skills built by doing — exactly what a small money mission demands.

Sources: APA | Harvard | CDC

DO THIS

Ideas your child could try

Work through these in order. Small, consistent reps beat one big push.

1

Buy lemons and sugar, sell lemonade on a hot afternoon.

2

Buy a pack of supplies, make friendship bracelets or bookmarks to sell.

3

Offer a service
washing cars, walking a neighbour's dog, watering plants.

4

Buy snacks in bulk, sell them one by one at a markup (with your okay).

5

Bake something cheap to make, sell it by the slice.

— COMMON QUESTIONS

Quick answers for parents

What age is right for the $5 challenge?

Around six or seven and up works well, scaled to your child. Younger kids can do a simple lemonade stand with help; older kids and teens can handle bigger plans and real budgeting. Match the challenge to what they can manage.

What if my child loses the money?

That's part of the lesson. Losing five dollars is a cheap, safe way to learn that risks don't always pay off — and to figure out what to try next time. Stay encouraging and help them reflect, not feel ashamed.

Isn't this pushing my kid to be money-obsessed?

Not at all. The goal isn't profit — it's initiative, problem-solving, and confidence. Money is just the real-world stakes that make the lesson stick. Pair it with talk about generosity and saving to keep it balanced.

My child has no idea what to do. How do I help?

Ask questions instead of handing them a plan: "What do people around here want? What could you make or do?" Offer a few options if they're stuck, but let the final choice be theirs so they own it.

How does selling things build confidence?

Every pitch, every "no," and every sale teaches a child they can put themselves out there and survive. Handling real customers builds communication, resilience, and self-belief far faster than any classroom exercise.

What if I'm not entrepreneurial myself?

You don't need to be. You're not teaching business theory — you're giving your child permission to try, fail, and learn. Curiosity and encouragement are all you need to bring.

READING HELPS. PRACTICE STICKS.

Turn these tips into a real skill.

In a live, small-batch Habbinson class your child speaks, performs and gets coached every session — the part a PDF can't do for you.

Book a FREE class →

or enrol from Rs 8,999 · habbinson.com/enroll